For those of us who don't want to spend thousands of dollars on Photoshop, a free trial version of Photoshop Elements will fit the bill. The trial version also contains all of the features that a user can find in an upgraded version of Photoshop. Like the full-fledged Photoshop, Photoshop Elements lets you manipulate almost any kind of image. You can resize, rotate, mirror, flip, distort or enhance it, add effects, text, logos, frames and many more. The interface can be simple or complex depending on how complicated you make it, but it will help you create professional-looking images. You can use it to check whether the lighting is balanced, adding details to blurry photos, or seeing how certain arrangements are coming out. You can even add glamour to normal photos to create a photo-editing art. Lets get started! Create a New Photoshop Elements Project Although this is not a Photoshop tutorial, you must start your project by creating a new folder where you will save your project files. You can then move the photos that you will edit to the new folder, directly from your desktop. Some of the best photographers have started their career editing their photographs through Photoshop Elements. You can click here for more details about starting a new project. Q: Python multiprocessing - print text to STDOUT and STDIN simultaneously I'm using Python's multiprocessing library to process multiple large images. From what I read, the best way to do this is to use multiple processes. I'm using the subprocess module to run an executable on a large image. The executable produces output, and the image represents the data for that output. When I run my script with multiprocessing, it stops producing output to STDOUT and hangs on STDIN. I would like to continue doing things while the image is being processed, and I want to print output to STDOUT and read input from STDIN. Is there a way to do this? A: You can enable the subprocess stdout and the subprocess stderr. If you do this and you want to read from the subprocess stdin you need to create and initialize a Queue. import multiprocessing import subprocess def f(pipe_out, pipe_err): # Process the original image p = subprocess.Popen(['foo.exe', '-o', pipe_out, '-e', pipe_err], stdin=subprocess.PIPE, stdout=subprocess.PIPE, stderr=subprocess.PIPE, close_fds=False) # At the end of the execution just print all the values for line in iter(p.stdout.readline, "): print line pipe_out.write(line) for line in iter(p.stderr.readline, "): print line pipe_err.write(line) f
